

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

Most of the songs and studies in this book have been written or arranged specially for this work by authors whose names generally appear in connection with the music. This material must not be reprinted or reproduced by any process, as all reproduction is in violation of the copyright law.

PREFACE.

THE MELODIC COURSE IN MUSIC was planned and named coincidentally with the Harmonic Course. The educational idea of the two series is the same, the order of subjects and the manner of development remain unchanged, but the practice element is differently treated. Power and facility may be attained in two ways. First, by practice on a large number of carefully graded studies, each to be used in a restricted way. Second, by a repeated and thorough study of a few distinctive typical forms. The first method was employed in the Harmonic series. The second is the basis of the present work.

The name Melodic series is justified by the large use of melody, the song element being the basis of study. Each idea is incorporated in a melody through which it is fixed on the learner's ear and eye. This remains as a type by which the tonal form is forever after recognized.

The melodies thus used are largely new and original. Well-known composers in America, England, France, and Germany have written songs for this series which are especially designed for the use of children. From the assembled mass of material procured, selections have been made; these have been carefully tested in the schoolroom to demonstrate their attractiveness to children and their fitness for the purpose intended.

It is not difficult to collect a mass of interesting song material for children, but to provide material which shall be pleasing in melodic qualities and adapted to the precise educational end desired has demanded infinite care and labor.

Music appeals first to the emotional nature of the child. It tends to heighten the sensibilities, stimulate thought, and arouse æsthetic impulses. If, however, the subject be dropped here, the benefit of the effort is uncertain, for it may have served merely to intensify existing tendencies rather than to arouse and develop the higher faculties of the mind. But it is well known that the study of music may be so conducted as to discipline the mental powers, strengthen the will, and remove the dangers which a purely emotional treatment of the subject allows. The accomplishment of this higher end in music study has been the unvarying aim of the authors in the preparation of this course.

The teaching force in the public schools is like a mighty stream, flowing ever, changing ever. It is therefore necessary that some constant, stable element shall exist if the discipline throughout school life shall be well aimed and effective. A good text-book in each subject furnishes a defense against the difficulties brought about through changes in the personnel of the teaching force. To accomplish this the book must clearly outline each year's work, and provide all the material necessary for the logical steps to be taken, and be so arranged as to make each lesson pleasing in itself and fruitful of results; but since all teachers are not equally well prepared to impart instruction in music, it is also necessary that the material shall be so graded and explained as to direct attention to the essential steps upon which a gain in power depends.

These difficult conditions are met in this series so fully that a faithful study of the material will not only cultivate a love for music and impart the power to interpret it, but it will also arouse in the teacher the true spirit of music instruction upon which the highest aim of music study in school depends, and establish a foundation for the development of the spirit of art in all of its applications.

The authors extend their sincere thanks to the following for permission to use copyright material, otherwise than that acknowledged upon the pages of the book:

Mary H. Howliston, "Pussy Willow" and "Hurrah for the Flag"; A. Flanagan Company, "The Little Bud"; The Churchman, "Bloomy Japan."

The following songs are used by permission of the George B. Jennings Co., of Cincinnati, owners of the copyright: "Snow Flakes," "Decoration Day," "Seed Time," "The Robin and the Chicken," "Indian Lullaby," "Waiting to Grow," "To the Golden Rod."

DIRECTIONS.

Begin at once to unite the voices and create a love for singing. Take the following simple songs. Sing each slowly and clearly as a whole, then have the children imitate phrase by phrase.

Use a chromatic pitch pipe. Take care to pitch the song exactly as represented.

Note the number of monotones, and make a special effort to interest them.

Pay strict attention to the phrase lines in the interpretation; the breath may be taken at the phrase end.

The sentiment of each line of the poem will more or less clearly dictate the varying expression of the music in regard to increasing and decreasing the speed and the tone power, and in giving special emphasis to certain tones.

Teach the following scale songs, paying especial attention to pure intonation. The pitch should be tested frequently with the chromatic pitch-pipe.

When the scale as a melody is well established tonally, pass from the words of the scale songs to the syllable names. Teach the syllables faithfully and test the pupils frequently.

The following studies should be presented orally; when mastered, the representation should be shown.

When the scale as a whole is mastered, give the pupils the power to hold any tone and establish the scale from that pitch.

IV.

Tone Study of Do.

Continue previous practice on the scale and on the tone studies. (See pages 9 and 13.) Give the following as oral Ear Training exercises in phrases to cultivate the ability to return to the first tone of a phrase after singing the entire combination. This exercise develops the sense for tones as individuals, and in relation to other tones.

In these exercises the object is, first, to gain the power to keep Do in mind and to return to it from every other tone of the scale; second, to establish a distinct impression of the melodic effect produced by combining each tone of the scale with Do.

The children are to sing these studies from the representation.

The exercises are numbered 1 through 15, each starting with a 'Do' and returning to 'Do' after a series of other tones. The notation is as follows:

- Exercise 1: Do (B-flat) — Re (C) — Mi (D) — Fa (E-flat) — Sol (F) — La (G) — Do (B-flat)
- Exercise 2: Do (B-flat) — Re (C) — Mi (D) — Fa (E-flat) — Sol (F) — La (G) — Do (B-flat)

The Scale.

The scale forms the basis of all music. It is the universal song. It is the same in all keys; the starting point in every key is Do. Do may be placed on any staff degree.

The key-signature need not be explained here. Its use is to indicate the position of Do on the staff. The last sharp is always on Ti (seven of the scale). The last flat is always on Fa (four of the scale).

Object of these Exercises:

1. To give the power to sing melodies with syllables.
2. To give the power to hold the pitch of any scale tone, and to sing the scale from this new pitch as Do.
3. For practice in unison and for individual test.

Tone Study by Dictation.

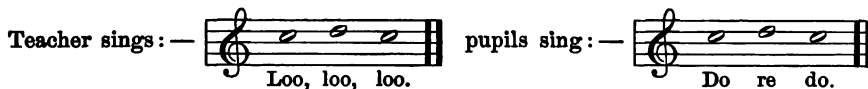

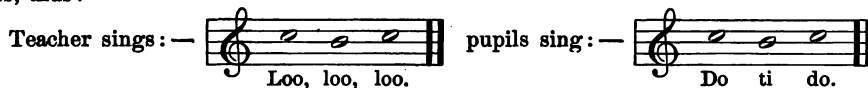

Before each lesson in reading from the notes the teacher should give a brief series of dictations, thus: The teacher sings:—

calling the tones loo, or using any other syllable name she may prefer. She then says, "What did I sing?" The children reply, "The scale down." Then the teacher says, "You sing it," and the children sing, giving the names of the tones, thus:—

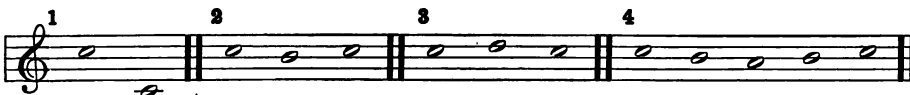

From this point onward, the teacher sings brief melodic successions of tones, using a vowel or neutral syllable, and the children respond by singing the same, naming the tones, thus:—

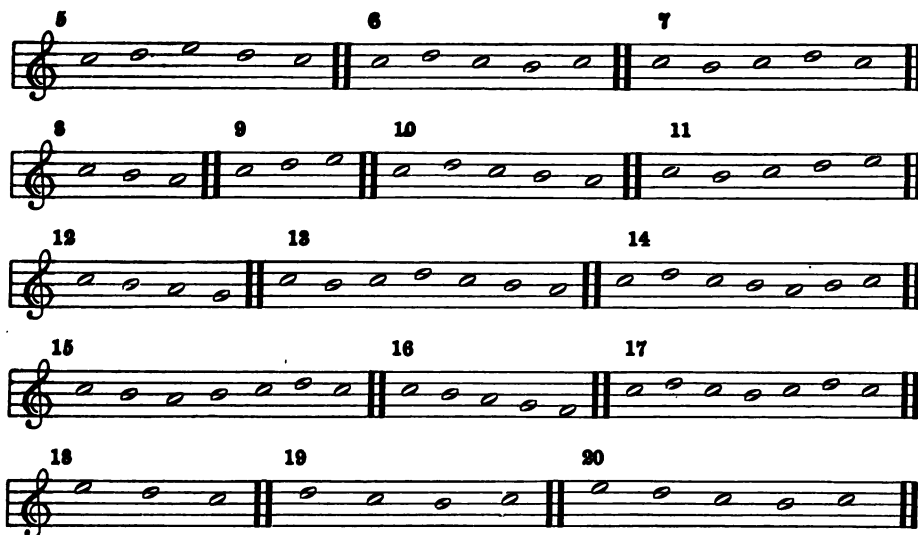

These exercises are given in the key of C, but as a matter of ear training it makes no difference what pitch is taken for the first tone, provided, however, that it be high, pure, and entirely in tune, so that the children can perceive clearly what the relation of the tone is.

Daily Oral Dictation.—The teacher sings the exercise with loo. The pupils respond by singing the same tones, giving the syllables. The pitch of the exercise may be varied to suit the teacher's voice.

NOTE. Begin each day with No. 1. Add each day one or more new exercises. Repeat the more difficult ones daily. In a short time the ear will be sufficiently trained to detect each combination instantly.

Phrases Beginning on the Last Count of the Measure.

Exercise of more varied scale successions and more developed rhythms. Marking the meter is the chief matter for attention. In beginning exercises which open with an unaccented tone, sing the unaccented tone naturally and fully, and begin to beat with the first accented tone. It will be found to confuse the pupils if the teacher counts "one," "two," and requires the pupils to begin on "three." Simply begin naturally and freely and count the beat when the first accent appears.

These melody studies illustrate the principle involved in the preceding examples, namely, taking the interval by repeating the figure, or motive. The introduction of the rest shows how music is punctuated. Rests are to music what periods and commas are to literature. They do not increase the difficulty, they simply indicate the meaning. Hence do not regard the presence of a rest as a difficulty. Measures three and four (Exercise 84) are like one and two save for the appearance of a most natural and easy pause for breath in the fourth measure.

Examples 85 to 88 are for practice with the rest; exercises 87 and 88 combine this practice with the interval.

Two-part and three-part measures are called simple. When two two-part measures are combined they form a compound measure requiring four beats. The first and the third tones in Exercise 97 should be accented; but the third tone less strongly than the first.

Exercise 97 illustrates the principle of interval with longer phrases. Sing the first two measures twice to get the idea.

These exercises illustrate the use of the four-pulse measure, with a natural skip to the beginning of the second phrase. Rests are used in the simplest way in Exercise 104. The Motive and the Phrase.

(Period Form.)

Exercise 107 introduces the study of a new note value. The quarter note has been the unit of value. The half note will now be developed in the same way. Experiment has proved that the matter of note values is one which causes the child no confusion. A simple statement as to the meaning of the metre signature, and the thing to be done in accordance with it is sufficient.

112

Exercises 111 and 112 give further practice in taking skips by phrases. The same spirited reading and interpretation should be given to exercises containing half and whole notes, that was given to those containing quarter and half notes. In fact, the meter does not indicate tempo, and there is no reason why $\frac{2}{2}$ may not be more rapid or quite as rapid in movement as $\frac{2}{4}$.

The Rest.

Exercises 114 and 115 illustrate an important principle in the use of rests. Thus rests of less value than a note requiring one beat are used to modify the preceding note. They cause no pause and need no special teaching. The only difference between the first and the second half of the exercise, so far as interpretation is concerned, lies in making the tones in the second half short and detached. There is still a tone for each beat.

Sequential Groups.

Do - o - e - re

The principle involved in Exercise 117 is an extremely important one. In previous exercises, the phrases have invariably returned to the starting point. Here the return in the third measure is to a tone above the starting point. To secure the benefit of this step: Sing measure one, then sing measure three till the two measures are entirely clear in the mind. Then combine them by singing the exercise through.

THE REASON WHY.

What makes the lamb love Ma - ry so? The lit - tle chil - dren

IX.

Sequential Groups.

The idea of returning to a new tone rather than to the original starting point, is best developed in sequences. In Exercise 118 the motive is repeated from Do. Then it rises to Re. In this case sing the last half of the exercise first; then give it in connection with the first half.

In Exercise 119 the motive starts on Do, then on Re, then on Mi. Call attention to Do, Re, Mi, as starting points for the groups in measures 1, 3, and 5.
